

Who can I send email to?

Guidelines for permission-based email marketing

Why do I need permission?

Sending people unsolicited email, commercial or otherwise, is against the law in many countries worldwide. Besides that, wouldn't you rather be talking to people who you know are interested in what you have to say?

Who can I send email to?

People who have specifically signed up through your website

For example, by ticking a checkbox (not checked by default) on your signup or sales form

People who completed offline forms & indicated they wanted to be emailed

Eg: By filling in a competition or survey form where they specifically agree to receive email

People who gave you their business card and asked to receive email

If someone gives you their business card and you have also explained to them that you will be in touch by email, you can contact them.

Who can't I send email to?

Anybody that is not covered by the list above! Here are some examples:

Lists or email addresses received from a third party

Includes any list you bought or rented, got from a partner or membership organization. No matter the claims of the source of this list, you cannot send email to them.

Addresses you collected or "copy & pasted" from the Internet

Even if they look like ideal customers for you, you can't email someone just because you found their address.

Addresses you haven't emailed in the last 2 years
